

Clint Rogers

Social Studies Educator | History & Government Specialist

Clint Rogers is a passionate and experienced educator with over 25 years of teaching middle and high school students in both private and public K-12 schools. Specializing in American History, American Government/Politics, and Economics, Clint also incorporates interdisciplinary approaches that weave in elements of psychology, sociology, anthropology, and religion.

Known for his engaging and thought-provoking teaching style, Clint utilizes Socratic questioning and lecture-based learning to challenge his students' assumptions and encourage critical thinking. His classroom philosophy aims to prepare students for future academic and professional success by fostering the ability to converse, collaborate, and take intellectual risks. Clint's dynamic approach often involves creative activities, such as original skits, plays, and field trips, designed to inspire students and push them beyond their comfort zones.

In addition to his classroom work, Clint is deeply invested in fostering motivation and creativity in both students and fellow educators. Throughout his career, Clint has taught a range of courses from regular and Honors to AP and special education levels, adapting his approach to meet the needs of diverse student populations in rural, suburban, and urban communities.

Clint resides in Waxhaw, North Carolina, with his wife Lora and their five children: Benjamin, Leo, Ruth, Joseph, and Robert.
